I have just learned that the Clean Water Council is not going to ban the addition of biosolids, including sludge, to land in New Jersey. I live in a very contaminated area due to the release of PFAS chemicals for years by local, nearby industry. One company is just out my back door. The land I live on was created with biosolids by the builder. This state must not allow the addition of such contaminated solids to our land where we live, get our water, grow our food, and try to live healthy lives. It is already in our river and streams, and adding such material to our soil, which is already contaminated, is criminal.

You must make this ban active as soon as possible. New Jersey must be cleaned up.

I cannot believe the Council has taken such a sad attitude to this problem.

Sincerely,
