Nosey's Law was signed into law in December 2018. It is your responsibility to read the law and ensure compliance with it. If you plan to provide off-site performances with any animal subject to Nosey's Law, you must submit an educational outline on company letterhead that incorporates the New Jersey Student Learning Standards (NJSLS) for approval before any off-site performances take place.

Off-site exhibit animals must never be left unattended.

Importation

Regulated exotic and nongame wildlife entering the state must have the appropriate, current health certificates to ensure that they do not pose a threat to humans, native wildlife, or agriculture, and that they can perform as indicated in your application.

Also attach photocopies of current permits and health certificates for mammals. Photocopies of health certificates must be submitted with your application. For more information, contact the United States Department of Agriculture.
